A fun psychology study with 3-12-year-olds here in the museum! Everyone gets a gift!

WHO: We are researchers from the UM psychology department.

WHAT: We are studying how children think about revenge. In our 10-minute study, children see social scenarios and are asked what they think about the characters' behavior. Children also take part in a quick sharing game. Parents are invited to fill out a brief survey about their child.

WHY: We are interested in what children think about the acceptability of revenge compared to other conflict-resolution approaches. We are also interested in how this thinking changes with age.

WHERE: Living Lab: Near entrance to 2nd floor

This research is conducted by Dr. Craig Smith, a research investigator at the UM Center for Human Growth and Development.
