First of all, when you ask someone what racism is, they are probably going to say something like how "racism is one person being mean or cruel to a PoC!"

*Person of Color

When actually those are just the most obvious forms of racism. Most people can only agree that this type of racism is not right. But - let's think of that type of racism as overt-obvious - the top of this ice berg.

Some examples of overt racism are:

Racial Slurs

Swastikas

KKK

Neo Nazis

But Covert - not obvious - racism is at the bottom of the ice-berg;

"Make

"I don't America See Color" great again"

Euro-Centric Curriculum

Denial of white privilege

But ignoring your problems won't work either.

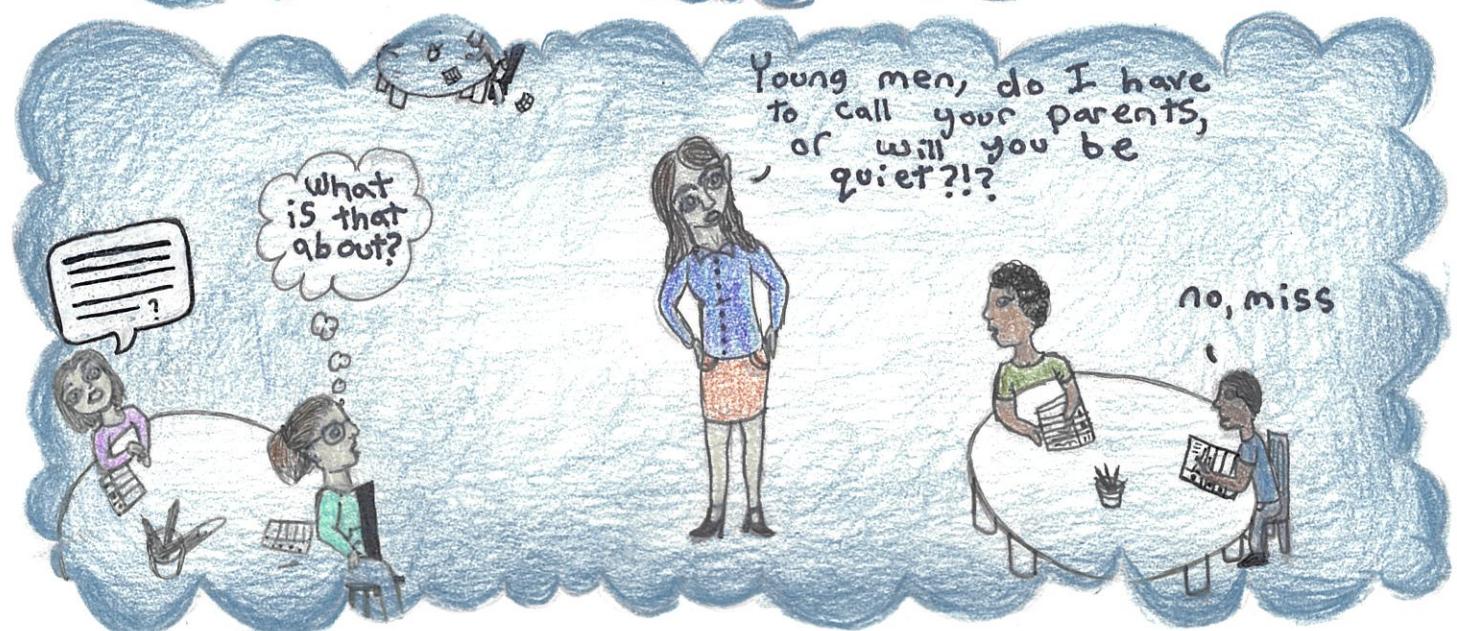

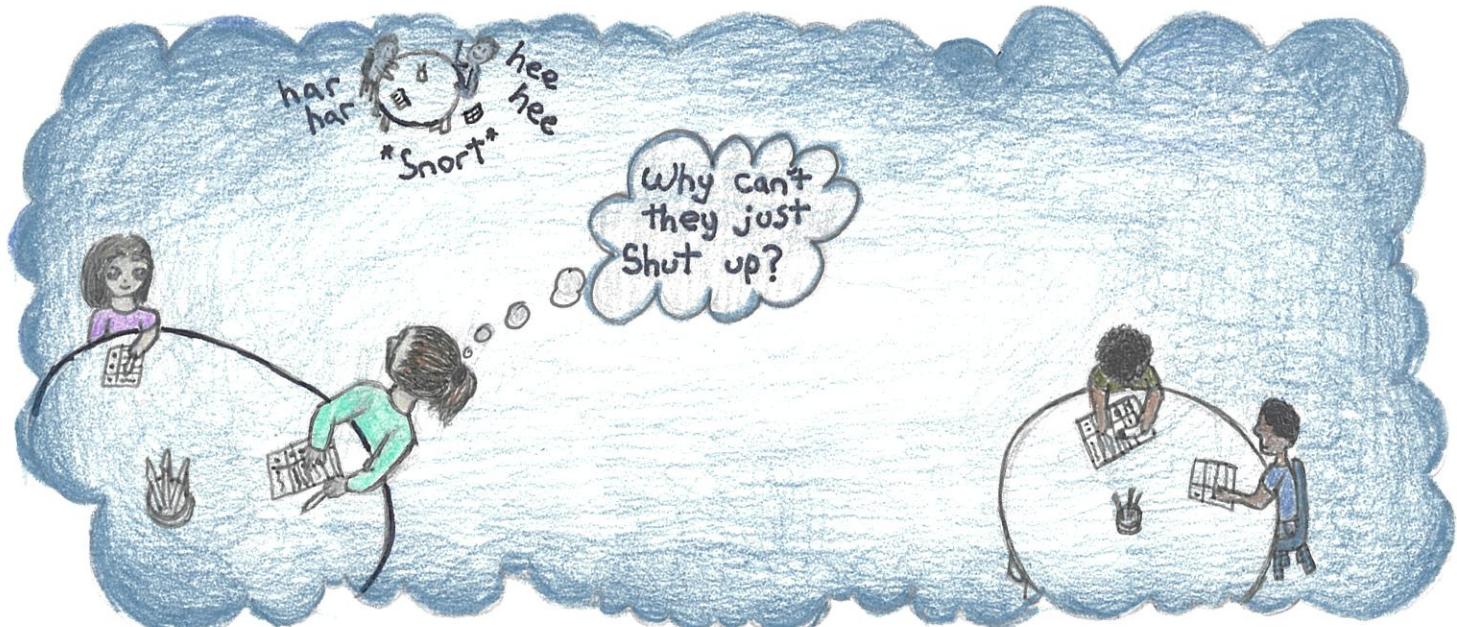

Eh, not true, I ignored all 7 of those bees around me and all of them died after sting-ing me!

These kinds of racism are everywhere,

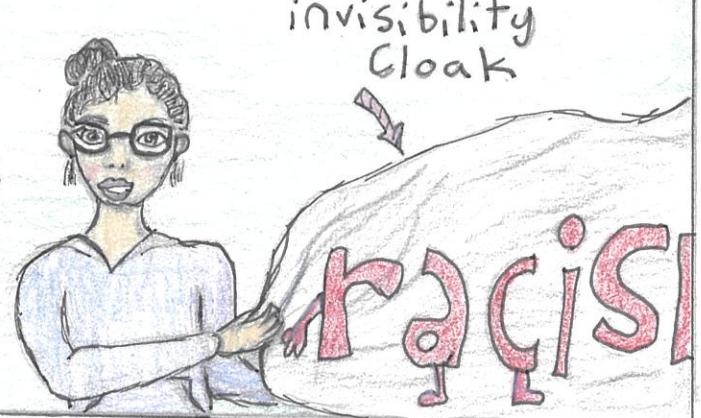

like the other day at School

... And it is so important to call out, but I didn't, and I really wish I did.

Here is some of the possible answers if I had said anything:

The positive way

Teacher

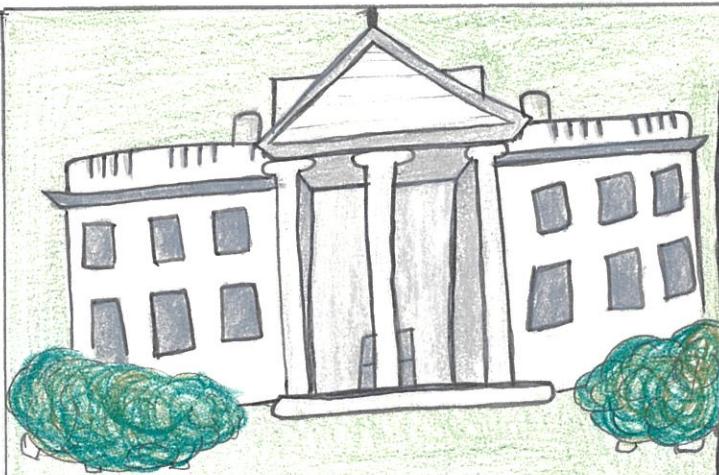

Thank you for pointing that out, I will work on my snap judgements.

The negative way

Here she is denying that she has an unconscious bias.

No, of course not! I don't see color! They were just louder.

To Sum it all up, race isn't the problem, racism is. And the reason it's still around is because well-meaning white people contribute to it thinking they are doing the right thing or not doing anything at all.

An example

(Washington Redskins logo*)

An example is voting for our current president, lots of well-meaning white people did it, and they may never in their life physically hurt a person of color, but voting for him means that other people doing it.

*We will not reproduce this racist image.

Thank you for reading this comic and we hope you think about these concepts.
