If the synthesis of raffinose was happening in a plant rather than in a flask, would assumption (a), that the “selectivity is enough to see a good yield,” mostly likely be a significantly larger concern or a significantly smaller one? Explain.